Organised by
Central Water & Power Research Station
In Association with
The Indian Society for Hydraulics (ISH)

About CWPRS

Central Water & Power Research Station (CWPRS) established in 1916, is India's premier institution for hydraulic research, providing scientific solutions for sustainable water resource management and resilient infrastructure. With expertise in river engineering, coastal management, and dam safety, CWPRS has played a key role in shaping the nation's water landscape. In response to emerging challenges like climate change, it has expanded its capabilities with state-of-the-art facilities for testing and calibration of hydro-meteorological and water quality sensors. Blending a legacy of innovation with modern infrastructure, CWPRS continues to lead in advancing water security and sustainable development at both national and international levels.

About ISH

The Indian Society for Hydraulics (ISH), Pune was established in 1992 as a technical, non-profit national organization which provides a forum for Engineers, Scientist and other technical personnel engaged in various activities related to Hydraulics, Water Resources, River and Coastal Engineering.

About the Programme

In alignment with the theme of "World Water Day 2026", invited lectures broadly on the subjects of River Hydraulics, Morphology, Reservoir Sedimentation, Flood Mitigation, Climate Change, GLOF, Dam Safety and Design aspects, Challenges in Water Resources Management & Solutions, will be delivered by eminent experts from IIT Bombay, CWPRS and Senior Officers from Water Resources Departments. The event is open to all for participation without any registration fee.
